Alexandria Gazette WILLIAM MURRAY,

TUESDAY EVENING, MAY 8.

To the Memory of H. C. Clark, Who died in Alexandria, Va., April 28, 1877, in the twenty-fourth year of his age.

Life's tossing sea lay out before thee, Bathed in the glow of Youth's bright morn ; Each crested wave of this unfathomed sea Reflected back Hope's brighter dawa.

No storm cloud hovered in the west, But on the fields of szure burned A lonely star, which caused the rest To fade, and into darkness turn.

Led onward by its kindled ray, The bark upon the tide was borne,-For there Euterpe's shrine-thy Day Would be eternal dawn!

Before thy sun had reached its zenith here, Thy soul passed out into the great Unseen, Like the unfolding of a matchless flower,

Or like the waking from a cruel dream. That soul of thine, so wrapped in music here, Can now expand, and catch the mystic strain That floats across the fields of that bright

-- sphere, Where life is perfect-free from pain. Thy form we place within the tomb, And trusting, wait until that Light Shall break upon the gathered gloom, And lift the pall of death's dark night!
